

The City's SOCIAL LIFE

Events, Gayeties and Personal Activities of the Week

According to a New York paper, the hostess, at a recent dinner, decided, after much agitation, to wear black with a bunch of violets. Mrs. A., looking lovelier than ever in black with a bunch of violets, was the first guest. Soon after her came Miss B.—in black with a bunch of violets. The C's and the D's arrived together—Mrs. C. being dressed in black with a bunch of violets, while Mrs. D. wore black with a bunch of violets. Mrs. E. entered the drawing room a little late, but no sooner had the first greetings been made than an irresistible, long-drawn-out "We-e-ll," went round the assembled company. Miss E. wore black with a bunch of violets. "Was it planned?" asked one of the men guests. "Were all six of you in deliberate collusion to appear this evening in uniform—and a kind of mourning uniform at that?" The women had much difficulty in convincing the men that it was all pure accident, due partly to popularity of the black evening frock, but mostly because such frocks, especially with a bunch of violets, are so generally becoming to all women.

Some novelties, says a New York paper, are to be noted in the floral display preliminary to the coming of Easter. The use of chiffon with blossoming plants and as bouquets has been a feature of the winter's floral decorations. The artistic skill with which the chiffon and the flowers are combined produces an effect that justifies the union. The fabric used is a web-like gauze of scarcely greater thickness than the delicate lining of a flower petal. This gauze in some of the lovely new designs is very effective with the natural orchid blossom. In bouquets, baskets and roundels for table centers some of the best florists are copying the French ribbon effects. Anyone who has seen them in Paris will recall the marvels worked by a French florist with, perhaps, a pot of ferns and some yellow velvet or yellow satin ribbon. The ribbon is twisted and tied and worked into beautiful flower-like effects.

A Philopena.

I took her out to dinner—she was charming, I declared. It was, if you pardon me, A very sweet affair. We had a dozen courses—each an epicurean delight. The last one, a cobbler made of peach, with coffee, nuts and cream. She found a double almond, so suggested that we eat. A philopena. "Yes or no?" I asked the maiden sweet. "Well, let's take No," she answered gay. Her face with color bright. "It's a go," said "but, say, take care you don't get caught." At last I won; 'twas her mistake. This girl with eyes of blue. And when she said "will you take?" I simply answered "You." —James Courtney Chellis, in What-to-Eat.
